I consider myself a natural leader, capable of creating a positive work environment and fostering team commitment. My adaptability, clear communication, and ability to perform under pressure allow me to make the right decisions in every situation, always prioritizing both individual and collective development.

I am analytical and self-critical, convinced that success lies in continuous improvement. My approach combines detailed observation, strategic planning, and an unwavering passion for growth—both my own and that of my players.

Since I can remember, football has been my life. I grew up playing, breathing, and absorbing everything this sport represents. It's not just about coaching or managing; it's about understanding the game in all its dimensions. I have dedicated my career to learning, experiencing, and evolving, always with the goal of becoming the best coach I can be.

I am a determined and passionate person with a constant growth mindset. I am obsessed with football—not just on the pitch, but in all its forms: tactical analysis, leadership, team management, documentaries, interviews... anything that allows me to improve and transfer that knowledge to my players.

My journey as a coach has taken me to different countries and clubs, where I have absorbed various football cultures and ways of understanding the game. I have worked in Spain and Mexico, experiences that have enriched my vision and reinforced my belief that learning never stops. I am willing to travel the world if necessary because my goal is to keep growing, evolving, and leaving my mark wherever I go.

I am a demanding but approachable coach. I believe in hard work, discipline, and mutual trust. Wherever I have been, I have built strong relationships—to the point where many players have chosen to stay under my guidance rather than seek better teams. That loyalty is the greatest proof that, beyond tactics and results, my work has a real impact on people.

I am Uruguayan, and I carry that identity with pride. My character reflects the grit, passion, and commitment that define us. My mission is to instill those values and help my players reach their full potential, both on and off the field.
